

Organic Valley

The earth's most delicious, most healthful foods are made when farmers work in harmony with nature.

Working with nature is what inspired Organic Valley's original seven farmers to form an organic farming cooperative in Wisconsin in 1988. Since then they have followed their guiding ethos of believing in one simple truth: The earth's most delicious, most healthful foods are made when farmers work in harmony with nature. Today, this guiding principle has grown Organic Valley's membership to 1326 family farms throughout America's Heartland, 34 states across the country, and one Canadian province. Representing 10% of US organic farms, being a cooperative of family farmer-owners and having a clear mission, Organic Valley is a leader in organics. Their farmer-owned co-op produces a cornucopia of organic products including; milk, cheese, butter, eggs, juice, soy milk, produce, and meats.

Less known than Organic Valley's dairy products, they also produce a diverse range of produce. From their network of sustainable, small farms, they pool nature's very best produce and provide a healthy volume to regional markets. With 150 produce farmers, they strive to offer as much local produce to as many local customers as possible. With this strategic mission in mind Organic Valley products are most widely available in the Midwest, where a majority of their farmers are located. Organic Valley is actively expanding their produce farm members to be able to provide sustainably grown, organic and local produce to more customers.

Organic Valley has partnered with Local Dirt to provide customers with the option of ordering produce online. Through Local Dirt, customers can now easily locate and order Organic Valley produce online. Organic Valley is especially excited about being able to alert their customers through Local Dirt when locally grown seasonal produce becomes available. Local Dirt helps bring organic locally grown produce from Organic Valley's Family of Farms to your table.
